THE RELIGION OF BUSINESS AND THE BUSINESS OF RELIGION

The present oil scandals which are shaking up business and political circles in the United States, and the uncovering of shady deals of financing in connection with the last government in Ontario, are indications that "there is something rotten in the State of Denmark."

The seriousness of this state of affairs in the public business does not lie merely in the shattering of the political careers of certain ambitious men seeking political advancement. It lies more particularly in the fact that the ethics of public business are in many respects a reflection of the ethics prevailing in private business.

As a consequence of the revelations coming to light, the masses of people who are mere brain or brawn workers earning a living "by the sweat of their brows" are for the first time being given a peep into what actually goes on behind the closed doors of government cabinets and directors' meetings where the "big business" of the nation is transacted. The faith of the masses in its business and political leaders is being shaken to the very roots. The consequences are difficult to foretell. One thing, however, is certain and that is that these things are merely the rumbling warnings of radical changes which must take place in public and private affairs.

The whole matter suggests to our mind another question. What is the relation of business to religion and morality? Since many of those high up in the affairs of business and politics generally stand high in their respective church circles, and claim to be followers of those principles of morality and ethics which religion teaches, how do they reconcile and for that matter how does the average business man reconcile his occasional questionable business deals with his religious and ethical principles?

The question is a real one because it is certainly evident that the "doings" under investigation are not in consonance with the ethical principles of "thou shalt not steal," "thou shalt not lie," "the square deal," etc., etc., which religious people are supposed to profess.

Of course to many people the coupling of religion with business involves a contradiction of terms. Business is supposed to be something for this earth, whereas religion is supposed to be something for the other world. "Business" is "the things that are Caesar's" whereas religion concerns the things that something that concerns only one day. Business is secular; religion is sacred. Business grows out of ledgers; religion out of the Bible. For bad business one goes to jail if one is not lucky enough to have a good lawyer; for bad religion one goes to Hell unless one has a forgiving minister. The debts of business must be paid in hard cash; the debts of religion may be paid with prayers, confessions, atonement. Business is war, a sort of economic cannibalism. It is a case of either you eat your competitor or your competitor swallows you up. For these reasons one so often hears so-called religious people remark "business is business."

This diabolical dualism between business and religion makes of religion a lie and a chimera instead of an ideal. It makes hypocrites of those who live according to this dualism. This dualism transforms life into a jungle where the law of the tooth and the claw prevail. It degrades and brutalizes men, calling out the most selfish and lowest in them instead of wakening the spirit of altruism and their higher natures. The prevalency of this dualism shows itself even in the education and rearing of our children. We spend endless time and money fitting them for making a success of business, but little or no time training their character so that they will conduct their business along the highest ethical lines. This tendency of our age to worship the Golden Calf instead of the God of the Ten Commandments, is noticeable in the frequent clamouring to abridge the Decalogue. Whereas, what our age needs is not that the Decalogue should be abridged, but applied; not curtailed, but enforced; not reduced, but diffused.

The idea that business and honesty are two different compartments of life is so widely accepted that it oftimes leads worthy young people with sensitive spirits from avoiding a business career in order to keep their soul free from the taints of self-seeking that seem to characterize business. We know of no worse form of modern atheism than the popular belief that God, religion, ethics, justice, sympathy, have no jurisdiction in the field of business. It is a dualism from which the minds of people must be rid before our politics, which is only another name for the public's big business, and private business can be cleansed.

There is in reality no real basis for the distinction between religion, ethics and business. They are merely different aspects of human nature, and different expression of the same personality striving to give expression to the creative impulse of his being.

Religion and business are both engaged in for profit, for self and society. Only the spelling varies. The former is spelled prophet, the latter profit. Business and work are the generate. Religion is the manifestation of spiritual energy applied to our physical energy in order to make the latter purposeful and worth while. Their religion is similar to that of a power-house generating current to the cable and wires and machinery through which and to which the energy flows.

Religion and ethics generate the current of idealism which, suffusing the energy of business and work, make life worth while and liveable.

Religion, we say, is based on faith. Faith is the soul's vision of the great invisible Being who creates and controls the universe. Where reason falters, faith begins. But business too is based on no surer foundation than faith. If religion rests on faith in God, business rests on faith in man. Faith in man is the logical outcome of faith in God. The faith in God we call religion. The faith in man we call credit. Without credit, business would crumble like a rope of sand. When a man goes to his banker for a loan, his banker examines not merely his rating, his statement of assets and liabilities, but he examines another rating—character. If the banker has faith in the integrity and honour of his man's character, then credit is forthcoming. Remove this basic element of faith from business and business ceases to be.

In religion too much faith leads to credulity and superstition which is harmful. In business too much faith brings increased credit and with it inflation, which is dangerous, because it is like having too much sail and too little ballast in your ship. It spells shipwreck. Too little faith in religion produces agnosticism and doubt, which brings in its wake spiritual hunger. Too little credit in business ties the hands and breaks the wings of hope and courage. Men crawl when they should run. The business of religion is to teach men to have faith in one another; the religion of business is to make it possible for men to have and to hold this faith and confidence in one another inviolable.

The business of religion is to teach men that they have a common Maker and hence are brothers. The religion of business is to lead men to realize that no man is self-sufficient. All are dependent on one another even as we are all dependent on God. What morale is to an army, team-work and co-operation is to business. If every man in an army competed with one another, havoc and defeat would result. In business, if cut-throat ruthless competition is permitted, failure results for all. What religion needs to do is to influence business to adopt a finer morale.

The business of religion is to teach that honesty is the essence of character. The religion of business should make it possible to do business, and make money when operating under the principle that "honesty is the

That for what it cost me to be free
I might have had an anchor."

The writer who reported the Heifetz concert in the "Mail and Empire," said that the audience went into raptures over the music; and he also gave other evidence that he either looked in at the last moment to grab a programme or wasn't there at all. There were no raptures and we wonder at one of the early reports in Heifetz's career that when he played people thronged up the aisles to the stage. Heifetz may be sitting on the top of the world as far as his artistry is concerned, but he hasn't the humanism to send people into raptures or up the aisles. His personal detachment, his air of apparent boredom, his frigid intellectuality forbid ecstatic response from his hearers and there is nothing heart-searching even in the most superb technique. Heifetz will never be the greatly beloved violinist that Kreisler is, for example, because, although his violin is full of charm and accomplishment, it is a singing instrument, not a speaking one, and is uneloquent because it lacks the power to brood and to rejoice.

A protest meeting in Brooklyn heard that if the proposed Johnson immigration bill becomes effective, only 4,000 Jews will be admitted annually from the persecution areas in Europe. This would make bad business for the Polish government, which proposes to tax emigrants by increasing the cost of a passport from about $3 to about $100. Perhaps, though, the action is in view of the decreased number of Jews who will be allowed from Poland to the States. If the other Southern and Eastern European countries would follow the example of Poland in making the cost of passport almost prohibitive to the very people who most want to get away, American politicians could stop worrying about immigration and turn their energies to even more profitable enterprises, such as oil and the like.

Intermarriage as a sermon subject was interesting enough to attract 2,500 hearers to Temple Emanu-El recently, where Rabbi Nathan Krass spoke and hundreds had to be turned away. Rabbi Krass told his hearers to refrain from intermarriage on religious grounds: out of prudence, if for no other reason, because of conflicts that arise over the rearing of the children of intermarriages. Then Rabbi Krass said that the individual Jew should sacrifice his personal pleasure in order that his religion may survive and his people may not be absorbed. He called this a deeper reason why the Jew should not intermarry. It seems to us that, on the other hand, he spoiled his lecture. His "deeper reason" may have been that to him, but chances are, to most of his hearers the sacrifice note makes a poor appeal. Its place is at commencement addresses not at adult gatherings. Duty and sacrifice are not the motif of the age we live in and people are not nearly so interested in hearing of personal sacrifice for the longevity of any religion as they are in knowing how to enjoy life and, possibly, religion at the same time. If the Jewish religion is to live in the future only by the personal sacrifice on its altar of the people of to-day it is going to need even more bolstering than it is getting from the rabbis already.

The New York World offers weekly prizes for those pupils in the schools who select what they think is the most important in the week's news and tell why. This typical list of winners is one of the reasons why anti-immigrationists work so hard, as it includes more than a minyan: Nathan Cosminsky, Theodore Isaacs, Benjamin Gelardin, Michael Zenowitz, Samuel Weinberg, Anthony P. Costella, Michael Gorenstein, William Reznikoff, Isidore Markowitz, Joseph Kastner, Elihu Platowsky, Hyman Walkowitz, William Draguinas and Samuel Goldman.

Do not rub the nap away—

BLANKETS are given a nap to make them soft and fluffy, and to give them warmth. They should therefore never be rubbed as this will remove some of the nap, and it will also felt and shrink them.

To thoroughly cleanse your blankets without rubbing them try this method.

Lux is sold only in sealed packets —dustproof!

Washing Directions

A rich live suds is essential throughout the entire process of washing blankets. To obtain this, use two tablespoonfuls of Lux to every gallon of water in the washing.

Dissolve the Lux thoroughly in very hot water, whisking it into a thick suds. Add cold water until lukewarm. Put the blanket into the rich suds, souse it up and down, and squeeze the suds through the entire blanket. If the suds die down, add more Lux, taking care that it dissolves before you put the blanket in again. Take care to press the suds through the very soiled spots, but never rub the blanket.

Rinse in three or more lukewarm waters, of the same temperature as the suds. Fold evenly, and run through a loose wringer, and hang dripping. Never wring them. Stretch and pull into shape at intervals when drying.

Blankets washed the Lux way will retain their soft, fluffy appearance even after innumerable launderings.

ALL FOODS SHOULD BE SEALED

The medical profession very generally advocate that all food products should be sold in sealed packages. All cities rigorously inspect butcher shops to prevent meat from being infected, many prohibit milk from being sold in bulk, and gradually this will come with everything. "SALADA" was the first to introduce the package idea as regards tea over thirty-two years ago, and so "SALADA" is still a little purer and a little better than other teas. It has by

Your Curtains

EVERY HOUSEWIFE who takes pride in the appearance of her window draperies, yet despairs at the difficulty of stretching them to proper size and shape after washing, will be interested in the service rendered by our curtain department. When they come in, the curtains are first carefully measured. Then they are washed with pure soap, being handled throughout this process with utmost gentleness. While still wet, the curtains are placed in pairs on a new and ingenious drying frame which stretches them perfectly even and flat at their exact original size. This frame holds all four sides whether they are straight or ornamental, so that the edges are perfectly parallel and even the corners absolutely square. Curtains cleaned and finished in this establishment are returned shaped as perfectly as when new. We know that our work will please you. Telephone us and we will send for your curtains.

EDITORIAL

Honesty will make a man just merely obey the law. Some men regard themselves as honest though they engage in shady deals, so long as their lawyers keep them out of jail.

According to our present-day conception, a man who steals a few pennies is a miserable dog; a man who steals a few dollars a common thief; a man who steals a few hundred dollars an uncommon swindler; a man who steals a few thousand dollars is a promoter; whereas the man who steals a few millions a captain of industry or a banker. This sort of honesty is not enough. It is a minimum. Its maximum is honour. Honour is the chivalry of honesty. Honour will make a man do more than the law of the land. It will lead him to embody in his business dealing those principles of ethics and morality without which religion is mere superstition and mummery. When honor and honesty cease to be the religion of business, then men rot to the core and business disintegrates.

In this connection our young people need to learn a lesson. Thousands of them are growing up with the "get rich quick" ambition. To make money is the slogan. The methods do not count, so long as one can get away with it. We require a cessation of the new idolatry of the so-called successful man. There are magazines and newspapers to-day whose wide circulation was built up because they feed their readers with nauseous details and false advice of how so-and-so "arrived." The successful getters have become the high priests who minister at the altars of a new religion whose name is Success.

Nowadays it is not how a man got his money, but that he made money, that counts. "How much is he worth?" is the admission card to high society, high political office, etc., not of how much worth is he. Riches alone should not be enough to commend the unmerited and unstinted reverence which our modern world pays to wealth, even if it is "tainted." If we are to have morality go hand in hand with politics and business, then this apotheosis of Money and Success must cease. The successful failure who has retained his honour and integrity and can look the whole world squarely in the face is more to be preferred than the unscrupulous, ruthless, successful man, whose conscience has atrophied and whose victims are legion.

The cardinal need of business and politics to-day is for more justice and honour. Too many men are in business for profit and too few for service and the happiness which the joy of service affords.

Mr. E. A. Filene, a successful merchant prince of Boston, recently formulated this simple code of business ethics, which we recommend: (a) A business, in order to have a right to succeed, must be of real service to the community. (b) Real service in business consists in making or selling goods of reliable quality for the lowest practical possible price, provided that the merchandise is made and sold under just conditions.

The business of religion is to put God into life, ethics into every day of the week, the soul into the counter, God's law of love and justice into our relation with our fellow-men. The religion of business is to see that the soul is put into the making and selling of garments and goods. If this were the case, a man's business would not be his drudgery and duty, but his delight, his education, his inspiration, his art, his religion.

SHEA'S

Miss Juliet, an exceedingly capable mimic, impersonates nearly every recognized stage celebrity, assisted at the piano by Lou Handin, in an act entitled "A One Girl Revue."

Harry Watson, Jr., an old favourite, is here again with new songs and snappy chatter.

Jack "Rube" Clifford is called "Camera Eye" Carter in a character he has originated of the "Rube" detective. Ted Armsterdam assists him in his clever comedy.

Freda and Anthony, Italian comedians in "Bartcha-Kalloop," have fun that is brisk and up-to-the-minute.

Raymond Wilbert is called "An Unusual Fellow," and his offering is a sensational surprise with plenty of thrills and laughs. Shea's New Review completes the bill.

For April 21 the Avon Comedy Four, one of the funniest singing acts in vaudeville. Paul Morton and Naomi Glass, musical comedy favourites, have a new act, "April," in "two showers," by Paul Gerard Smith and music by James P. Conlin.

REVIEW JUNIOR SECTION:

I would like to join the Cousin Family of the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW.

My name is.....

I live at.....

I am.....years of age.

ENTER OUR NEW COMPETITION! COME ONE! COME ALL!

All our cousins are invited to send an entry for our Passover Competition. There will be prizes for the best letters and stories, and the subject is one that I hope you will all find interesting. You are to describe a Passover party, to which you may invite any twelve of your Jewish story friends, David or Samson, Esther or little Miriam, or any of the other characters of fiction or history. It ought to be a nice party, don't you think? Because you can describe what each wore, and said and how they acted, and whether or not they helped to entertain the other guests. So let your imagination run riot, and see what delightful hosts and hostesses you can be. . . . See that your letters are addressed to 319 Bay Street, Toronto, and that they do not arrive later than April 25. Here's luck!

Cousin David.

Dear Cousins:

It can hardly be the spring, but then again perhaps it is! Who knows? But I do know that quite a few of my girl and boy cousins have quite deserted me. Instead of appearing at my office door with a nice bulgy letter bag, filled with mysterious and exciting letters of all kinds, the postman enters with a very lean and starved-looking bag that is oh! so woe-begone; or else (and you mustn't let it happen ever, ever, ever, EVER again), he doesn't come at all! And if you've ever waited for a letter that didn't come, you know that there is no feeling that is quite as depressingly lonesome, as a disappointment of that kind. And so, my very dear young dears, you must all see to it that you breathe all sorts of nice thoughts to me, and since April is a very showery, breezy sort of month, I guess you had just better breathe those thoughts into writing, so as they won't get damp or blown away! Expecting a very bulgyful mail bag,

Cousin Judith.

P.S.—Cousin David says, "Them's my sentiments," so perhaps you had better send him some letters too.

SAYINGS OF WISE MEN

True happiness consists not in the multitude of friends, but in their worth and choice.—Dr Johnson.

When the outlook is not good, try the uplook.

The simple and childish virtues of veracity and honesty are the roots of all that is sublime in character.

Cast forth thy act, thy word, in the ever-living, ever-working universe; it is a seed grain that cannot die.

Happiness is not given exclusively to any one period of life; it may be enjoyed by all.—Paley.

Here is a tongue twister that is guaranteed to twist the smoothest of tongues:

Walter's Winifred

"Welcome warmer weather, Walter. We were wishing winter would wane, weren't we?"

"We were well wearied with waiting," whispered Walter wearily.

Wan, white, woebegone was Walter, wayward, wilful, worn with weakness, wasted, waxing weaker whenever winter's wild, withering winds were wailing. Wholly without waywardness was Winifred, Walter's wise, womanly watcher, who, with winsome, wooing ways was well-beloved.

"We won't wait, Walter; while weather's warm we'll wander where woodlands wave. Won't we?"

Walter's wonted wretchedness wholly waned.

"Why, Winnie, we'll walk where we went when we were with Willie. We'll weave wild-flower wreaths, watch woodmen working, worms wriggling, windmills whirling, watermills wheeling. We will win wild whortleberries while witnessing wheat winnowed."

Wholly wonderful was Winifred's womanly wisdom:

Dear Cousin Judith:

Here I am again; this time sending you a poem, and I hope it will be published. I have followed the stories and poems and everything else, and I have noticed that there was someone who said, "Wouldn't it be nice if all the members of the club could meet in Toronto." I think it would be jolly, but, if you asked me my opinion about it, I think it would be just as nice for all members to send their pictures and then publish them and then every member could get acquainted that way. What do you say, Cousin Judith? Why not ask all the members?

THE PROCLAMATION

From a blossomy bed, called a Rose to a Pink—
"Summer's stepped into the garden, I think,"
"She is here, she is here," cried the Pink to the Rose—
"Brushing my fringes with the tips of her toes."
"She is here, she is here,"
"She has come
With a shower";
"Filled are my stores," buzzed a Bee in a flower.
"She is here, she is here,"
said a Cloud
"And my grey
In the rose of her rainbow is melting away."
"She is here, she is here,"
trilled a Lark;
Piped a Wren—
"Here in the heavens, the garden, the glen,
With a gift for a Rose,
For a Pink,
For a Bee,
For a Lark and a Cloud, for a Wren and a Tree."

Dear Esther:

methinks there may be some cousins too shy to send us pictures, as well as some who haven't any of themselves. Me, f'rinstance, I haven't. I never did have, and sometimes wonder whether I ever will have a photo of myself! What do the rest of you think about it, cousins? In the meanwhile, we can continue to paint word-pictures of ourselves, because really letters do give us some idea of the writer. I hope that you will visit us more often, and not stay away again for so long a time. Thanks for the poem.

Cousin Judith.

KING SOLOMON THE WISE!

Do you children know the story of Solomon and the questions put to him by the Queen of Sheba? Well, one day the Queen brought before King Solomon ten boys and ten girls about six years old. These children were dressed alike and looked very much like twenty boys. The king was asked to tell which were boys and which girls. He asked one of his slaves to have brought into the room twenty basins of water, some soap and towels, which were placed before the children who were then asked to wash their hands. The girls washed up to the elbows and the boys only up to the wrists. It was a simple matter for King Solomon to distinguish the boys from the girls then.

THE LOST TRAVELLER

In the days of King Solomon three merchants went on a journey to buy goods. Their road lay through a deep wood, and in the dark one of the merchants became separated from his companions and had to continue the journey alone. He was afraid, however, that, unprotected, the large sum of money that he carried would not be safe, and he determined to bury it until he found his companions again.

A SPY

So he found a field, and peering anxiously around to satisfy himself that he was unobserved, he dug a hole and placed his bag of gold therein, carefully replacing the earth. Unfortunately for him the owner of the field had been watching him, and directly the merchant departed he dug up the treasure.

KING SOLOMON'S ADVICE

When, after a few days, the merchant came back to fetch his money he found, to his despair, that it was gone. In great distress he went to King Solomon and told his story. The King said: "My son, first go and find out the owner of the field where your money was buried and say to him 'My dear friend, I had taken a great deal of money with me on my journey. For fear of being robbed I buried a portion of it, but I still have the larger part with me. Now I am in doubt whether I shall bury this or place it in charge of a reliable man.' What the owner of the field advises you to do, that do."

THE BITTER BIT

The merchant did as the king suggested, and the owner of the field said that it would be simplest if he put the money where the other was buried. He thought that the merchant had not discovered his theft and that he would be able to secure the second portion also. So he put the money he had previously stolen back in the hole. The merchant thus found his money restored, and went on his way rejoicing and praising the wisdom of the king. The thief gnashed his teeth when he realised he had been outwitted.

HOW TO BE POLITE

Politeness is to do and say
The kindest thing in the kindest way.

It Is Not Always Easy—	But It Always Pays—
To apologize	To avoid mistakes
To begin over	To endure success
To take advice	To keep on trying
To admit error	To think and then act
To be unselfish	To forgive and forget

THINK IT OVER!

Positions are a good deal like apples. Those that are easy to get lie on the ground under the trees, and are sure to be found jammed, wormy or rotten, but there are many people who are too lazy to do more than stoop down to pick them up.

Those which hang low on the tree are hard and green and are apt to give one the stomach-ache. It is only at the top of the tree that you will find the best fruit where the rains have washed off the dust and the sun has painted rosy cheeks.

But to reach the top you have to do a deal of climbing, and it is hard work to climb trees. You may prefer to lie on your back under the tree with your mouth wide open, hoping that a juicy apple will drop into it; but take my word for it, the apple is more likely to drop just outside the opening and damage your countenance.

Most of our Canadian girls and boys understand French as well as English, but I shouldn't be surprised if none of them can understand this little Japanese poem, and so here's a translation.

Yubi ni tarina; Issum Boshi
Chissai karada okina nozomi
Owan no fume hashi okai
Kyo ye "Haru-baru" nobari yuku.

• • • •

Shorter than your finger
Was Issun Boshi;
Though tiny was his body,
Great of heart was he.
With his rice bowl for a boat
His chop-stick for an oar,
"Haru-baru, haru-baru."
He rowed to Kyoto's shore.

There was an old man with a beard
Who said, "It is just as I feared!
Two owls and a hen, four larks and a wren
Have all built their nests in my beard."

Lesson—oral composition.

Ruth—"I saw a bird perched on the twig."

Teacher, pleased—"Isn't that a nice sentence, class?" Ruth used the word perched. It's a very nice word."

Next day these sentences were given: The dog was perching in the street. I saw a man perched in the door. The horse was perching.

GERMAN JEWS APPEAL FOR RELIEF

New York (J.T.A.)—"German Jewry is in acute distress. Famine and despair dwells in the houses of Jewish Rabbis, teachers and their dependents," reads an appeal by Rabbi Dr. Auerbach addressed to Rabbi Dr. Key Jung of the Jewish center.

The appeal continues: "You all know what loyal German Jews have done for the promotion of the Holy Torah, for the relief of Jewish suffering all over the world. Remember the teachers, the heralds and the pillars of our ideals. Do not forget the terrible plight of their widows and orphans. All you who knew German Jewry in her happier times, all who have benefited from their ideal congregational life, all those who directly or indirectly have received German educational assets—remember the distress of German Jewish professionals in these desperate times!"
